Storytelling for Action Pavilion At COP28

This year at COP28 UNFCCC Climate Conference in Dubai, UAE, the Bellona Foundation is hosting the Storytelling for Action Pavilion in the UNFCCC Blue Zone, in partnership with BAFTA albert, Futerra, and Think-Film Impact Production.

Stories are core to human nature. We are moved by narratives with meaning and relate to one another through engaging characters. In the face of the dramatic shifts in the global climate and global economy, people are seeking truly authentic and engaging stories to provide understanding, empowerment and hope. Stories that can enable meaningful climate action.

Good storytelling has also proven to be highly effective at building public awareness and engagement on important issues, making it an underutilized opportunity for engaging millions of people worldwide at this pivotal moment in humanity’s own story.

The Storytelling for Action Pavilion will host a series of conversations that have never been had at COP between the entertainment community and the climate science & policy community on the role of storytelling in addressing global climate change. It will feature participation from major entertainment studios, broadcasters, and leading storytellers and creators to:

- Explore why storytelling represents a critical opportunity to engage global audiences in tackling climate change.
- Share how storytellers are effectively engaging audiences on both the realities and solutions to climate change, and how members of the talent community can raise awareness.
• Bring attention to the need for greater support for storytelling capacity to enable more genuinely entertaining, engaging, and evidence-based storytelling.
